1. Other Contributions to Instructional Programs

(a) Development of departmental “Capstone Course,” (Wieting, Michael Lovaglia) through 2003-2004 academic year. Course is addition to undergraduate curricula (B.A and B.S) to begin fall 2004 for all majors. Teaching Assistant developmental support for 2003-2004 and instruction during 2004-2005, 2005-2006 provided by College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

(b) Instruction in University of Iowa First-Year Seminars, “Food, Eating, and Social Relationships.” Included in Mary Geraghty, “First Year Seminars: Students Sample the Possibilities,” Liberal Arts, Fall 2000, 7:14-15.

(c) “International Network of Introductory Sociology Classes” (with Lisa Troyer and Michael Lovaglia), 1998 and continuing. This is a developing network involving introductory sociology courses in 11 countries (France, Germany, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Kenya, Netherlands, Norway, South Korea, Taiwan, and the United States). Sustained by a specially created Web page, e-mail linkages, and a paper document, “Notes on the Architecture of Village Greens.” Through the Web page, general news is circulated and participants can access library resources at the University of Iowa; intellectual discussions among faculty and students occur through the Web and e-mail; collaborative research involving students at the various national “nodes” is conducted and discussed through “chat rooms” and e-mail.

(d) “Doors into an Expanding Information Universe,” 1996-continuing. This is a major recasting in progress of the pedagogical system developed since 1973 for teaching research methods at the University of Iowa. Includes paper documentation, structured research experiences, and especially the use of five new university sites that students visit for training in cutting-edge sociological methods from experts on campus.

(e) Sociology and the American Family, published by Correspondence Programs, University of Iowa. This is a specially designed text-book for use in the correspondence offering and the residence offering of “Sociology of the American Family” at the University of Iowa.

(f) The Social Context of Method, 1990 (revised 1995). This is a specially designed text-book for use in statistics/methods courses at the University of Iowa: “Theory, Research, and Statistics.” 1994 (revised 1997).

- (g) “Theory, Research, and Statistics,” (34:11), Correspondence course offered by the University of Iowa, 1990 (revised 1998).
- (h) “Sociology of the American Family,” Correspondence course produced for Committee on Inter-Institutional Cooperation, Chicago, 1982; now offered by University of Iowa (revised 1988, 1998).
- (i) “Sociology of the American Family,” A Distance Learning Course from the University of Iowa, 1977.
- (j) Sui Generis, 1976-present. This is a newsletter produced within the context of the methods sequence at the University of Iowa. In-house circulation, as well as circulation to former students, and all former teaching assistants in the sequence.
- (k) Social Change, Information and the Individual: an Exercise in Futurology. This is an instructional module designed to illustrate the role of computers in society. The package consists of a student manual and four computer programs which utilize student-computer interaction, 1975.
- (l) SIMSEARCH. This is an interactive computing package developed for use in undergraduate methods courses. The package is comprised of six interactive computer simulations which simulate the decision making tasks involved in doing social research; and an instructional manual for use of the simulations, 1975 (periodic updates). [Featured in Change (Report on Teaching, #4), July 1977, “Ending the Basic Blues,” pp. 61-65 ].
